Epidemiologist

Professor of Epidemiology

A presented and self motivated Ph.D. who is highly interested in education and research in the fields of public health and epidemiology. Since I was a lecturer for medical students as well as supervising many postgraduate students in epidemiology, a vast area of research in medical fields is covered by this researcher according to students interest to work on different topics and, therefore, related articles in many different topics have been published, relatively. However, always there was a main interest to work on methods for assessing the level of health among people (healthy or diseased) living in human communities, in particular “quality of life” and “participation and autonomy”. As there has been a gap in medicine for having valid and reliable scales to measure the level of health so far. My experiences improved my skills in teaching, research and team working in addition to qualitative and quantitative investigation methods that relatively help me in healthcare decision making.
